P R E F A C E.

THE materials of the present volume, all taken from the charter-room at Taymouth, have been selected more with the view of illustrating the antiquities of the Central Highlands, and the modes of life and thought of their inhabitants in the old time, than for any purpose of public national history, or for the genealogy and antiquities of the family of Breadalbane. But that family having so long borne sway in the district, their personal affairs are to some extent mixed up with all local history ; and a general acquaintance with the early descents of the house of Glenurchy is necessary for the full understanding of the materials now brought together. It is here supplied by the first article of our collection.

The "BLACK BOOK OF TAYMOUTH," has been long known and used as an authority in the Highlands. It is now for the first time printed from the MS. of its author, Master William Bowie, who seems to have discharged the double duty of family notary and pedagogue to the grandsons of Sir Duncan Campbell, the seventh laird of Glenurchy. He dedicates his work to his patron, in the month of June 1598, and though he lived to add some matter of subsequent date, the conclusion, coming down to 1648, seems written by a different hand. His chief object was to record the successive acquisitions of property. In his Latin verses, he instils the virtuous maxim—

Black Book of Taymouth.

. . . *dominum haud nobilitat domus,
Antiquissima quanquam et celeberrima ;*

while in native Scotch he admonishes the posterity of the house of Glenurchy to follow the footsteps of their ancestors, and as their chief duty—

“Conques or keip thingis conquest.”<sup>1</sup>

Bowie's narrative of the descent of the family has the advantage of being founded, in all material parts, on charters and written evidence in the charter-room, to which from his employment he had access. He only alludes to the origin of the race and its first settlement on Loch Awe, and then passes at once to Sir Colin of Glenurchy, the second son of the Lord of Loch Awe, who, on 20th October 1432, had a charter from his father of the territory of Glenurchy, and by the second of two illustrious marriages acquired the third of the great lordship of Lorn. Master William Bowie must have taken pride in recording his conquests, as well as his building of the Castle of Inverary for his nephew the first Earl of Argyll, and the Castle of Ilankeilquhirn, long the chief strength of his own descendants.<sup>2</sup> He built also the Tower of Strathfillane, and the barbican wall of the Isle of Loch Tay, whence the Nuns, who had given shelter and a grave to Queen Sibilla, had been ejected long before. The last two seem to mark the intention thus early, if not rather the natural tendency, of the younger of the great families of Campbell to withdraw from under the shadow of the elder house. That Sir Colin was a Knight of Rhodes, and was “three sundry times at Rome,” we must receive on our chronicler's testimony, unless it may be thought to have some support from the popular pedigrees of the Campbells, where Sir Colin is styled “Colin duibh na Roimh,”—black Colin of Rome, and from the family tradition recorded in the very curious Inventory of heirship moveables, made up in Sir Robert's time, where, among the jewels of the house, we find—“ane stone of the quantity of <sup>1</sup> To “conqueis” is to acquire. In law language we still speak of property of conquest, distinguished from that inherited.

of Eldin, touched in China ink by himself, which shews the Castle a good deal more entire than at present, and its “island” quite surrounded by the Lake. Mr. H. M'Culloch sketched the surrounding scenery on the spot for this plate.

half a hen's egg set in silver, being flatt at the ane end and round at the uther end lyke a peir, whilk Sir Coline Campbell first laird of Glenurchy woir when he fought in battell at the Rhodes agaynst the Turks, he being one of the knychts of the Rhodes."<sup>1</sup>

Sir Duncane, the second laird, acquired land by precarious titles all round Loch Tay, and as if destining that to be the future centre of the family possessions, while he built "the laich hall" of Kilchurn, he "bygit the great hall, chapel, and chambers in the Isle of Loch Tay." Sir Duncane was slain at Flodden with his cousin the Earl, and buried with him at Kilmun, "because in the foresaid field they died valiantly together."<sup>2</sup>

Of Sir Colin the third and Duncan the fourth laird, their historian chronicles little more than that the former built the Chapel of the Blessed Virgin of Finlarg, "to be ane buriall for himself and his posteritic," and that both kept all things left to them by their worthy predecessors.

John and Colin, the fifth and sixth lairds, were brothers of Duncan the fourth. Colin, though inheriting after two brothers, was thirty-three years in possession, and falling in the time of dilapidation of church lands, had time and means to convert the "tack" of many lands of Breadalbane, held of the Charter-house of Perth and of the Crown, into a secure feu-tenure, and to conqueis many other lands in Perthshire and a town lodging in the county town. He built the Castle of Balloch, where the house of Taymouth now stands,<sup>3</sup> and he added the four kernils, (corner towers,) and the north chambers, to the hereditary mansion of Kilchurn. Mr. Bowie celebrates him as "a great subject, as well as apparently the author, of some Gaelic verses, preserved in the collection of Dean M'Gregor, now in the Advocates' Library,—a collection which must be studied whenever the antiquities of Gaelic literature are to be honestly illustrated.

<sup>1</sup> The jewel so particularly described as the amulet worn in battle by the Knight of the Cross, would seem to have been used as a charm for more homely purposes afterwards; and one agreeing marvellously with its description is still at Taymouth, though it has not remained continuously in the family custody.

<sup>3</sup> Part of Sir Colin's work still remains at Taymouth, and some of the escutcheons of arms with which he ornamented his house, are still preserved at one of the Park Gates.

Justiciar all his time," in that he caused execute many notable limmers,<sup>1</sup> (not the least notable being that "Duncan Laideus," whose story will come afterwards,) and even the Laird of M'Gregor himself, that is, Gregor Roy of Glensthræ, who was beheaded with much solemnity on the green of Kenmore.

The seventh laird, Sir Duncan, our author's patron, is a person on whose history we dwell with more pleasure. Bowie records a glorious list of conquests of lands and church possessions, and the provisions he bestowed on his children, legitimate and illegitimate. But we have interest of another kind in Black Duncan—Donacha dhu na curich, as he is called from the cowl in which he is represented in his picture at Taymouth. He was, if not the first of Scotchmen, the very foremost of Highland proprietors, to turn his attention to the rural improvement of his country. His predecessors had indeed built rude dwellings and places of defence, round which time and decay have thrown a picturesqueness little thought of in their erection. But we find no signs of these earlier lords appreciating their beautiful country, or trying to increase its comforts or its productiveness. It cannot be said that Sir Duncan himself had taste for the picturesque, but he knew the profit as well as the beauty that might accrue from clothing the hill-side with timber and securing shelter round his mansion. He had some feeling for art also. He built the Castle of Finlarg and ornamented its chapel "with pavement and painterie." He built the tower of Achalladour, repaired Ilankeilchurn, built the house of Lochdochart, a great house at Barcaldine in Benderloch, (between Loch Etive and Loch Criran,) defended the grounds of Balloch against the river by a great embankment. He built or repaired the Church of Glenurchy, and built a bridge over the water of Lochy, "to the great contentment and weal of the country." He was enterprising enough to travel abroad and passed to the courts of England and France, and in 1602, thought good to take a view of Flanders and of the wars. He took measures for enforcing an old Scotch law which enjoined the planting of a few trees about every tenant's and cottar's dwelling, and on the greater scale which became the landlord, he "caused make parks in Balloch, Finlarg, Glenloquhay, and Glenurquhay, and caused sow acorns and seed of fir therein, and planted in the same young fir and birch." He seems to have imitated his cousin, William Earl of Gowrie,<sup>1</sup> in introducing trees of foreign growth, and tradition points to him as the planter of the venerable chestnut and walnut trees at Finlarg and Taymouth. He was probably the first of Scotchmen who brought in fallow deer, for our chronicler tells us that in 1614 he took a lease of the Isle of Inchsaile from the Earl of Argyll, and in 1615 "put fallow deir and cunnyngeis" therein. In another department of rural policy, it is not so certain that he was first, but it is of him that we have the first evidence, in connexion with the rearing of horses. In one bloody foray the M'Gregors slew forty of Sir Duncan's brood mares in the Cosche of Glenurchy, and at the same time a blood horse,—“ane fair coursour sent to him from the Prince out of London.”<sup>2</sup> The horse had come to an untimely end even before his royal master was taken away, but the stud went on increasing under the careful eye and vigorous management of Black Duncan.

Sir Duncan may be thought to have inherited some of these tastes through his mother, a daughter of the accomplished and unfortunate house of Gowrie. I have found only one of her books in the library. It is a copy of Sleidan's Chronicle, London, 1560. On a fly-leaf she has written—This buke pertenis to Catherine Ruthven Lady of Glenurquhay.

<sup>1</sup> When the Earl of Gowrie was pressed by Home of Godscroft to join in the second conspiracy, for which he eventually suffered, "looking very pitifully upon his gallerie," says Godscroft, "where wee were walking at that time, which he had but newly built and decorated with pictures, he brake out into these words, having first fetched a deep sigh—'Cousin,' says he, 'is there no remedie? Impius hæc tam culta novalia miles habebit! Barbarus has segetes!'"—(Godscroft, Edit. 1644, p. 377.) Upon a scrap of paper on which, while in prison, he had noted down some pleas to be addressed to his judges, we find written—“What pitie it wer to take me from my parks and policie!” He was an extensive planter, for that age, and particularly fond of the Spanish chestnut and walnut.

<sup>2</sup> We know something of this "fair coursour." The Knight of Glenurchy had presented the Priuce (Henry, son of James VI.) with some eagles with which he had had good sport, and in return the prince sent him "a horse to be a stallon, one of the best in his stable," with a hope that when he came to Scotland seven years hence, he should get some of his breed.

We have abundant evidence that the seventh laird was a man of affairs, and well maintained his place in that age of unscrupulous politicians. In his own territories, castles, and family, he practised a very vigorous personal control and the most methodical administration. The estate books and books of household accounts and inventories kept under his direction give us the earliest picture we have of the life of a great Highland lord.

It is not so easy to imagine the rough chieftain cultivating literature: yet, grim as he stands in the picture opposite,<sup>1</sup> the black Duncan had a taste for books, read history and romance, and is not quite free from the suspicion of having dabbled in verse himself. Several of his books are still preserved at Taymouth, where the frequent inscriptions in his own hand shew he took pleasure in them; and we must remember that book collecting was not yet a fashion. One of his favourites, in which he evidently much delighted, was "The Buike of King Alexander the Conqueroure," a ponderous romance in MS.<sup>2</sup> Some original verses, mostly moral and religious, written on the blank leaves of his books, would be worth preserving, if it were possible more satisfactorily to establish their authorship.

The influence of Sir Duncan Campbell extended over an unusual length of time. He was forty-eight years lord of the family estates, and was eighty-six years old when he died in 1631.

The next generation carries us a long step forward in civilisation. Sir Colin, the eighth laird of Glenurchy, was as fond of repairing and extending his family castles as his father had been. Moreover, he gave in to the new luxuries of rich furniture and hangings of silk and tapestry, in which England was then shewing its wealth. His chronicler records his expenses in Arras hangings, silk beds, and damask "napery," brought out of West Flanders.

<sup>2</sup> This, which has never been printed, is a translation of the great French ROMAN D'ALEXANDRE, executed by Sir Gilbert Hay, c. 1460, and extends to about 20,000 lines. Two copies are at Taymouth; both apparently transcribed for Sir Duncan, who has written his name repeatedly in one of them, with the dates 1579, 1581, 1582. The other copy contains at the end Duncan Laideus's testament, which will be mentioned hereafter.

SIR DUNCAN CAMPBELL OF GLENURCHY.

We learn, by his books still preserved, that he was not only a Latin scholar, but fond of French and Italian literature.<sup>1</sup> Contemporary portraits are found of Sir Duncan, but Sir Colin is the first of the family who employed artists to paint pictures as ornaments for his house. He "bestowit and gave to ane Germane painter, whom he enterteinitt in his house aucht moneth . . . the soume of ane thousand pundis." The name of the German artist is not found, nor is it of much interest to ascertain who painted the "threttie broads" and portraits from fancy which still cover some of the walls at Taymouth. Sir Colin could appreciate the more delicate pencil of an artist of his own country. It is to his taste that we owe the largest collection, and perhaps the best works of the pencil of the first of Scotch painters, Jamesone. The notice of Bowie, and the letters of Jamesone himself, shew the rapidity of the artist's work and the prices he received for his pictures. He undertakes to paint sixteen pictures between July and the end of September, and he informs his patron that his ordinary price is twenty merks for a half length, or twenty pounds, with a double gilt muller (frame). These letters also serve to prove that Jamesone was working at Taymouth while Bowie or his continuator was writing the "Black Book," and it does not seem unreasonable to conjecture that the fanciful and often grotesque portraits that are found in it are from the ready pencil of one accustomed to paint imaginary portraits, and actually engaged at the time in ornamenting the family tree of the house of Breadalbane. The portrait of Sir Colin, Jamesone's patron, is more careful than the rest, and is evidently a characteristic likeness.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> He was in the habit of writing on his books those pithy Italian and Latin apophthegms then so much admired. The sentences of Italian seem chiefly to be taken from a little collection, entitled "Oracoli politici cioè sentenze et documenti nobili et illustri," printed by Aldus, 1590, a copy of which, marked with his initials, is preserved at Taymouth.

mouth, is inscribed "The Genealogie of the hous of Glenurquhie, quhair of is descendit sundrie nobill and worthie housis, 1635. G. Jameson faciebat." Sir Duncan of Lochow, the great ancestor of the family, is in a red plaid and kilt, with a shirt of mail, short checked hose, and bare knees. The other pictures of Jamesone's I have observed at Taymouth are—

Johne, Loird Leslie, 1633.

Thomas, Lord of Binning, 1636.

If Master William Bowie lived to write the memoir of Sir Robert, the ninth laird of Glenurchy, it must have caused him much grief. The house of Breadalbane had fallen upon evil times. Public events and family expenses combined to bear it down, and the Notary's last pages record the legal steps taken by numerous creditors against the unhappy Sir Robert. It is a pity the old man could not have lived to see the family restored in fortune and increased in honours in the next generation, in the person of his pupil.

THE CHRONICLE OF FORTIRGALL.

The second article of the volume has been named "THE CHRONICLE OF FORTIRGALL," on presumptions afforded by the MS. It is a small 4to book of paper, much decayed and imperfect, giving no name of the compiler or writer. The first part of its contents are almost identical with a chronicle already known and published as Dean M'Gregor's Chronicle. The author (a person whom we reverence as the sole early collector of Highland poetry) was James M'Gregor, Dean of Lismore, and Vicar of Fortirgall. The present compilation notices the death of the Dean himself, which took place in 1551, and brings the record of events considerably lower. We gather from its contents that the writer was a M'Gregor, acknowledging M'Gregor of Glensthræ for his chief; that he was a priest, and "said his first mass" at Whitsunday 1531; that he came to the Cure of Fortirgall at Beltane 1532; and that he spent the remainder of his life in that neighbourhood. He records chiefly the obits and funerals of Fortirgall and Inchaddin, though mixed with such as interested him of the passing events of the Highlands, and of the public affairs of the country. He records that he began to sow oats in the Borllin of Fortirgall on 23d March of each of the years 1575 and 1576; and the last entry of his journal is dated 25th April 1579.

But though the period of his record is, all things considered, the most interesting and important of Scotch history, there is no comment on public events, and nothing that is new to the student of history. Within the space of two leaves, the deaths of Rizzio, of Darnley, of Murray, of Archbishop Hamilton, are noted; without any new circumstances, and with a remarkable avoidance of any expression of feeling. Somewhat more is elicited by the murder or death of some good neighbour or friend of the chronicler, when he deals a short eulogium,—“bonus fuit,”—or especially if he can say “non fuit avarus,” or “Deus diligit hilarem datorem,” concluding with a “requiescat in pace,” or “Deus propitietur.”

Perhaps it was necessary caution that prevented him from denouncing more openly the Reformation, to which he was no friend. 1558, says he, fuit principium novæ legis hereticorum. In 1559, he records that the summer before, the great steugh came in Scotland against the faith that our progenitors had long time afore that. That same summer (1559) “the Charter-house (of Perth) was destroyed, Scone burnt, mekil trouble in Scotland. None durst say mass nor sacrament in the old fashion.” He notes the death of one who was “firmus in fide catholica,” and of several who died in lege Lutherana, or who “renounced the law and the sacraments,” leaving no doubt of his own principles; yet he occasionally bestows an orate pro anima even upon one of these heretics; and he records with equal impassiveness the day of St. Bartholomew in France,—“the Papetis in France slew and murthered in the night mony men and women of the congregation;” and the death of John Hamilton,—“the said bissop was tayne and justifeit and hangit in Strywelyn.”

Perhaps the part of the Chronicle of the Curate of Fortingall which may prove most useful, is his record of the weather,—of good and bad seasons, and of the consequent fluctuation of the prices of victuals. The first noticed by him is 1554, when there was frost and snow “whiles” before Andersmas, (30th November,) and continued frost from 13th December, and great snow from Yule day at even, and every day from thenceforth more and more without any thaw till the 17th of January. “It was the greatest snow and storm that was seen in memory of man living that time. Many wild horses and mares, kye, sheep, goats, perished and died for want of food in the mountains, and in all other parts; and though partial thaw came on 17th January, it began then to snow and freeze till the 22d day of February, on which day men and women might well pass on the ice of Lyon in sundry places, and little tilth till the 26th day of February, and but in layth (sheltered) places."

The winter of 1561-62, there "was mekle snow in all parts, and many deer and roes slaine." The summer of 1563 he commemorates as "right dear; viz., the boll of meal 5 merks." In the following summer there was "mekle rain continually, but good cheap of victuals in all parts." The boll of meal which had been as high as 5 merks (£3, 6s. 8d.) the preceding year, sold for eighteen shillings, and malt for twenty-eight shillings.

"The summer of 1570 right good, and all victuals good cheap, but the winter and Lentron quarter following evil weather, many sheep and goats died through scarcity of fodder. In the spring of 1571-2, from 15th January till the 22d March great frost, so that no ploughs went till eight days thereafter, and men might well pass and repass on the ice of Lyon the 3d day of March."

But the following winter struck the chronicler of Fortirgall as more than usually severe. "The 22d day of February there came after noon a great storm, and snow and hail and wind, that no man nor beast might lift up their heads, nor walk nor ride, and many beasts perished without in that storm, and many men and women perished in sundry places; and all kinds of victual right dear, and that because no mills might grind for the frost. All corn came to the Mill of Dunkeld out of St. Johnstoun (Perth) betwixt that and Dunkeld, and all other bounds about far and near. The meal gave that time in St. Johnstoun, 43 shillings, the malt 34 shillings; and before St. Patrick's day (17th March) the meal was 25s. 8d., and the malt for 30 shillings."

Many other notices of the weather occur, which are always valuable when made at the time and by an eye-witness; and many instances are given of that fluctuation of prices which in times of little foreign trade was ever and anon reducing the people at one plunge from plenty to starvation.

Some liberties have been used in printing this little chronicle. The entries which in the original stand very promiscuously, have been arranged according to the order of date. A list of Scotch Kings<sup>1</sup> from Boece, has been omitted. A few memoranda and notes, moral precepts, medical recipes scribbled on blank pages of the original, have been here collected at the end, that nothing might be omitted which may be thought to show the modes of acting, of thinking, and even of idling, in the time and country which are the subject of our collection. All that has been attempted with regard to the language, is to print literally as the writer wrote. Probably his native and familiar tongue was Gaelic, and in it he may be correct, but his Latin is very peculiar, and even in Scotch, which was not bound by very strict rules of spelling, the curate of Fortirgall takes unusual latitude.

DUNCAN LAIDEUS' ALIAS MAKREGOURIS TESTAMENT comes next. Pennant saw it at Taymouth in September 1769, and communicated it to Warton, who speaks of it as "an anonymous Scotch poem which contains capital touches of satirical humour not inferior to those of Dunbar and Lyndesay."<sup>1</sup> He inclines to think the hero and supposed speaker of the poem altogether an imaginary personage, a mere type of the Highland freebooter.

DUNCAN
TESTAMENT.

The verses are written on the blank leaves at the end of one of the copies of the Romance of Alexander, but in a different hand from it. They are unfortunately anonymous, and we have no clue to enable us to conjecture the author. It was a mistake, however, to suppose that the subject of the poem, the person in whose mouth the satire is put, was an imaginary person. Duncan M'Gregor, called Laidus or Laudasach, was but too well known in Breadalbane and the Highlands for half a century, although the documents and records by which his history is vouched are of the end of it.

<sup>1</sup> History of English Poetry, p. 482, Edit. 1840.—Though so accomplished an English scholar, Warton was hardly able to appreciate the language of Duncan Laideus. His explanatory notes of the few verses which he quotes are very bad.—"Barne tyme," a family of children, Anglo-Saxon bearn team, he renders "harvest." "Rig," a ridge of ploughed land, he makes

"Rick." "Quart," he calls an English gallon; I know not why. "Into deid," which means merely "indeed," he reads "unto death." "Allege," which the context ought to have shown him stands for "legate" or "bequeath," he translates "give, assign." "Sessioun," he makes "Parliament," a sense it never bore in Scotland. Here it means the Court of Session: &c. &c.

He must have been of some standing in the proscribed but powerful clan, although his daring character may have helped as much as his cousinship to place him in the office of tutor of the young Chief of M'Gregor. His chronicler informs us that in his youth he led the life of all his clan,—the life of the Arab robber, or the wolf on whose head a price is set. Hunted “through Lorne, Argyll, Menteith, and Breadalbane,” he retired to the wilds of Lochaber, where he hoped to find shelter with Lochiel; but the Earl of Argyll having pursued him hotly, he doubled back to Breadalbane, where he was taken and thrown into prison by Sir Duncan Campbell, the second Laird of Glenurchy. He escaped, and made himself strong with many followers in the confusion that followed the Field of Flodden, where the Knight of Glenurchy was slain, with his cousin of Argyll and their royal master. From this period (1513) till his death, he was the terror of the Highlands. Of the injuries he suffered personally, or the wrongs he may have had to avenge, we know little. The story is told by the other party. His last exploits we must take from the formal narrative of the public prosecutor. On the 26th November 1551, the Queen's Advocate set forth that “Duncan Laudes and Gregour his sone recently, namely upoun Souday the 22d day of November instant, at sex houris at evin under silence of nycht, be way of hamesukin cam to the hous of Alaster Owir alias M'Gregour servand to Colyne Campbell of Glenurquhay of the landis of Moreis and be force tuke him furth of his said hous and be way of murthure straik him with quhingearis and crewellie slew him and spulzeit and tuke fra him his purs and in it the soume of fourty poundis; and incontinent thireftir past to the landis of Killing to the hous of ane pure man callit Johnne M'Bayne Pipare and thair assegit the said hous and brak the durris thairof and be force tuke the said Johnne furth of the samin and straik his heid fra his body and crewellie slew him and gaif him divers uther straikis with quhingearis in his body,” &c. For this murder on his “awin natioun,” as his historian tells us, he and his son were charged<sup>1</sup> and “put to the horne;” which they treated with derision. And the common process of law was not likely to be otherwise treated by such as Duncan. Here, however, it was enforced by others than the Queen's messengers. Alaster Owir, though a Macgregor, was a "servant" of Glenurchy's, who was, therefore, bound to avenge his murder. Of one step taken for that purpose we have the particulars in this collection. On the 11th March 1551,<sup>1</sup> Glenurchy took a bond of manrent or service from James Stewart of Ballindoran, and two Drummonds, whereby these parties bound themselves "with their whole power, with their kin, friends and partakers, to invade and pursue to the death Duncan Laudosach M'Gregour, Gregour his son, thair servands, partakers and complices . . . be reason that thair ar our deidlie enemies and our Soverane Ladie's rebels."<sup>2</sup> The foxes had still another double for their lives. Notwithstanding the deadly feud that was between them, and although Glenurchy had obtained a gift from Chatelherault the Governor, of the escheat of the outlaws, they found means to avert his wrath, and even to obtain his protection. On the 2d of May 1552,<sup>3</sup> Colyne Campbell of Glenurquhai (the zeal of love and good conscience moving him) received Duncane Makgregour and Gregour his son in his maintenance (protection), forgave all manner of actions and faults that they had committed, and gave them back the escheat of their goods which he had purchased when they were the queen's rebels; they being now received to the Queen's peace and his favour. The sole condition stipulated was that the Macgregors should fulfil their bond of manrent (service) to Glenurchy in all points.<sup>4</sup> The subsequent cause of quarrel we do not learn. The wild blood of the Macgregors may have broken out in some new enormity too great for pardon and too clear for trial. On the 16th of June 1552, says the Curate of Fortingall, Duncan Macgregor and his sons Gregor and Malcolm Roy were beheaded by Colin Campbell of Glenurchy, Campbell of Glenlyon, and Menzies of Rannoch.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>2</sup> 17, p. 192. It may have been in revenge of this undertaking that the M'Gregors, many years afterwards, murdered John Drummond (though under double assurance of their clan) with the circumstances of special and almost solemn ferocity described in a subsequent bond.—112, p. 244.

<sup>5</sup> Before the end of 1552 we meet with a gift to Glenurchy of the escheat of moveables and immovables of umquhil—M'Gregor alias Ladassach, and Gregor his son . . . convict of certain crimes . . . and justyfeit to the death.

Such was the person in whose mouth the anonymous poet of Breadalbane, following the practice which Dunbar and Lindsay had rendered popular, has put the "Testament" which is here printed with scrupulous fidelity from the original MS.

The reader of modern English poetry will require to make some allowance for the time and the country of the Scotch poet of the 16th century. But the student of early English literature will find no difficulty in the mere language and spelling; and much of what now seems uncouth in the thoughts and the management of the poem, is in truth imitated from the great early masters who were writing verse and cultivating the same Saxon tongue in Scotland and England equally and contemporaneously.

The impersonation, in the beginning, not only of the virtues and vices, but of other abstractions, a practice which may be traced back to the "mysteries" and Church plays of the middle ages, will not seem altogether strange to one familiar with the allegories of Spencer and of John Bunyan. Neither will he want authorities for the inartificial confusion of the persons of the supposed speaker and the poet, though, in the present case, this produces a bad effect. We find it unnatural that the robber and outlaw should patriotically lament the battle of Flodden which gave him his own liberty;—should describe the hanging of his fellows as a "blessed sacrifice to our Lorde," and everywhere mix up moral and religious reflections with his triumphant rehearsal of his worst exploits. But after making full deduction for such faults of composition, we find abundance to admire in this short poem. There is a breadth and intensity of satire worthy of Lindsay, and a tone of natural pathos of which Lindsay was hardly capable. The verses in which Laideus distributes his spiritual goods,—bequeaths to the Curate negligence, to the Vicar rapacity, oppression to the Parson, gluttony to the Prior; to the Abbot pride and arrogance, to the Bishop his "free will," and flattery and false dissembling to the Friars,—are in as vigorous a strain of condensed satire as the heats of the Reformation produced; and we may look in vain in authors of that day for the expressions of natural feeling and pathetic regret with which the imprisoned savage is made to take his adieu of the scenes of his free life and daring. The mere enumeration of the places is highly effective, and the occasional addition of an epithet descriptive is often appropriate and distinctive as well as poetical:—

- “ Farewell, Glenloch, with thy forest free,
 . . . . .
 Farewell, Breadalbane and Lochtay so sheen ;
 . . . . .
 Farewell, Glenalmond, garden of pleasance,
 For many fair flower have I from ye taen.”
- “ Farewell, Stratherne, . . . .
Plenished with pleasant policy preclair,
Of towers and townis standing fair in row.”
- “ Farewell, Menteth, where oft I did repair,
 And came unsought aye as does the snow,
To part from thee my heart is wonder sair.”

Some of these verses show a sense of natural beauty and a tenderness of feeling which we do not look for in writers of that age, and which no earlier Scotch poet had expressed so well, if we except the admirable Gawin Douglas.

Bonds of Friendship, Bonds of Homage, Bonds of Manrent and Maintenance, are found in greater or less quantity in all old Scotch Charter-chests, but it was reserved for the careful Sir Duncan Campbell to engross such Deeds in the form of a Register. From the Book of these compiled under his direction, the frame work of the following section is taken ; but the original bonds have been used wherever they are extant, and a large number are still preserved. If these were all of that kind so well known to the antiquary—mere modifications of the feudal relation of lord and vassal—it would not be necessary to do more than to point out their evident utility for family and local history ;<sup>1</sup> but here we have some of a different character, and some which seem to present new points of interest for the Scotch Antiquary. We have never before had a

BONDS OF MANRENT.

<sup>1</sup> Two large collections of these bonds of homage and friendship—of “manrent and maintenance,”—have been lately published by the Spalding Club, one from the Charter-room of Slaines, the other from Gordon Castle. For their objects, and the state of

collection of such transactions from a Highland Chief's castle. The mixture of the two elements,—of the patriarchal and the feudal,—of that where all property was (by theory) in the tribe, and that where (by theory again) property was in the lord alone,—is here seen for the first time. We have a great Chief and ruler of many Celtic tribes, living among them and conforming to their customs, yet holding his own territories and his position in the kingdom as a Feudal Baron. The M'Gregors and M'Nabs, like their Celtic brethren, holding property by no written tenures, having perhaps no individual property in the soil, were little addicted to commit their transactions to writing. But with the Norman, came strict rights of property, written tenures, and a propensity to records; and instead of the vague traditions of the pure Celts, we have here preserved definite, though slight, footsteps of their immemorial usages.

Charter-chests are rare in the Highlands, and in the Charter-chests of lowland Scotland there probably is not an instance of a formal deed of Adoption of a child, though the practice was evidently common under the Civil law. At Taymouth these deeds are so common, it was evidently an approved way of transmitting property.

One of them relates how John M'Gillespie received John Campbell of Glenurchy as his own son, and took him on his knee, calling him filium adoptivum, that is to say, his chosen son, and, he being on his knee, gave to the said John the half of his goods.<sup>1</sup> In like manner John M'Bay, and Mary Vykfail, his spouse, took the same John Campbell as a bairn of their own, and their special oversman and defender, and delivered a glove in token of all their goods and a bairn's part of their goods after their decease.<sup>2</sup> Many similar deeds in this collection show not only a new form, but a kind of transaction and a state of society unknown in the lowlands.

The Celtic custom of Fostering was, in fresh observance through Breadalbane and Argyll, during the period of these deeds, and extended through all classes. The provisions, when reduced to writing, are almost uniform, and one instance may be sufficient.

On the 5th November 1580, Duncan of Glenurchy agrees that his native servant, Gilcreist Makdonchy Duff V'Nokerd, and Katherine Neyn Douill Vekconchy, his spouse, shall have his son Duncan in fostering, they sustaining him in meat, drink and nourishment, till he be sent to the schools, and afterwards at the schools, with reasonable support, and they and his father settling upon him of "makhelve"<sup>1</sup> goods, the value of 200 merks of kye, and two horses worth forty merks, with their increase; the milk of the cattle being the foster parents' while they sustain the bairn. There is a stipulation that if Duncan shall die before being sent to the schools, another of Glenurchy's children, lass or lad, shall be fostered in his stead, who shall succeed to his goods; and he, or the bairn that enters his place, is to have at the decease of the foster parents, a bairn's part of gear with their children.<sup>2</sup>

A similar bond of fostering, with more minute stipulations, was entered into between Duncan of Glenurchy and Duncan Campbell of Duntrone; the former "being of before foster son" to Duntrone and Agnes Niklauchlane his late wife, and Duntrone and Agnes Nikolleane his present wife, "being of the like mind that love and favour should be and continue betwixt the houses of Glenurchy and Duntrone;" they receive Colin Glenurchy's son and heir in fostering, and the lady promises "to be to him a favourable and loving foster-mother in the same manner and condition as the said Duncan Campbell of Glenurchy of before was fostered in the house of Duntrone."<sup>3</sup>

The stipulation found in all these deeds, for giving the foster child his share in the moveable succession, is nothing more than reducing to writing what was the customary law of the Highlanders in common with the other Celtic peoples.<sup>4</sup> But the real benefit sought by both parties in those transactions,

the foster child his share of the land.—"If an uchelwr (high man) place his son with an aillt (villain) to be nursed. . . . that foster son shall possess the land of the aillt after his decease, unless he have children; and if there be children, he is to have the share of a brother."—Ancient Laws and Institutes of Wales, p. 10, Vol. II., translation.

was mutual support and strength. In times when none counted much on the protection of the law, families endeavoured to surround themselves with friends and allies; and a relation like this of fosterage begot feelings of mutual friendship better than the artificial system of Bonds of Amity, which were apt to stand or fall with the interest and temper of the parties. In one remarkable case, which does not come within the scope of the present collection, two families agreed to perpetuate the connexion, covenanting that the eldest son of the one should always be fostered by the other. We do not know the result, nor how long it was before that contract, like other schemes for unseen generations, fell to the ground.

In another instance I have lighted on a bundle of correspondence, a few letters of which will serve better than formal contracts to show the feelings of two families of the same lineage drawing closer the bonds of kindred by the still more tender relation of fosterage. The parties too, are of more than common interest. The father and the child were the Marquis and Earl of Argyll, each subsequently honoured by a death on the scaffold. The person selected as foster-father was the accomplished Sir Colin Campbell of Glenurchy. Even more important in such a relation, the foster-mother was Juliane Campbell, daughter of Hew, Lord Loudoun; but of her we know only what we learn from this correspondence, and her picture at Taymouth, giving the impression of sense and good nature.<sup>1</sup> The correspondence begins in 1633:—

FROM SIR COLIN CAMPBELL OF GLENURCHY TO ARCHIBALD LORD LORNE.

MY NOBLE LORD AND CHEIFF,

I receauit your lordships letter from Archibald Campbell schawing me that syndrie of your lordships freindis wer most desyrous to have your lordships eldest sone in fostering, yet for diuerss respectis your lordship wes better pleisit to have him brought vp with me, quich I acknowledge is a great testimonie both of your lordships trust and love, and I hop in God evir so to approve myself to be most willing and desyrous to deserue both. for their chief—sometimes renouncing their natural head and selecting him as leader and protector, yet retaining their own patronymical designations. These new subjects bound themselves not only to pay the allegiance of clansmen, but to give the “caulp of Kenkynie,”<sup>1</sup>—the Celtic equivalent for the Heriot of feudal customs;<sup>2</sup> to visit the chief’s house with “sufficient presents” twice in the year; to serve in “hosting and hunting;” and to be ready at all times “to ride and go” in their lord’s affairs.

THE RENTALS
AND ESTATE BOOKS.

THE RENTALS AND ESTATE BOOKS, of which extracts are given, present the characteristic marks of the country. Much of the rent is paid in oat meal and malt—the staples for food and drink. The tenants had little capital. The stock on the farms was “steelbow,” the property of the landlord, only the produce belonging to the tenant. The bow-house (cattle-house) was rated at so much “kain” or produce, in butter and cheese, in proportion to the cattle on that pasture. The money which seems to have been appropriated as part of the requisite stock for cultivating the bow-house farm, is called by an unexplained name of “strenth-silver.”<sup>3</sup> We are led to think what became of those cattle during the long winter of the Midland Highlands; but no information is afforded. Hay is not once named, and the natural produce of the glens can have been saved only in trifling quantities from the deer.<sup>4</sup> Sheep were evidently in small numbers, and the “clip of wool” insignificant, compared with modern produce, probably from the want of winter food as well as from the deer occupying the outlying pastures, insecure, at any rate, for any valuable stock.<sup>5</sup> These books show the attention to the rearing of horses that has been already noticed.

<sup>1</sup> Caulp is the best “aught” due to the chief,—or rather melius averium de conquestu. “Kenkynie” is chief or head of kindred:—

“Syne lief I the best aught I bocht
Quod est Latinum propter Caupe
To hede of kyn.”—Dunbar.

<sup>3</sup> Perhaps it has some analogy to the remarkable terms which designate this practice everywhere—ferreum pecus—stähtine viehe—steelbow, all indicating permanency.

<sup>4</sup> The old Register of the Bishopric of Moray has noted on a fly leaf.—“Apud Spynie 4 Julij 1580.—Not. that hay was wyn.” And no doubt the coarse produce of the bottom of the glen has been saved for winter use since ever man made property of animals.

THE HOUSEHOLD BOOKS show the usual provisions for the table. Oat meal and malt furnished the ordinary bread and the chief drink of the castle, where ale was distinguished as Ostler ale, household ale, and best ale. There was beef and mutton, fresh in summer, and for the rest of the year "marts," killed and salted when fat on the pasture; a small quantity of bacon; salmon of Loch Tay, and Glenurchy Salmon. Loch Fyne herring was already appreciated,<sup>1</sup> occupants of those sheep pastures to compare the quantity of stock they maintained of old with the present, and also the produce. For instance, the clip of the brae of Balloch and Drumturk in 1603, was eight score six fleeces, and they weighed but six stones.

<sup>1</sup> In the year 1590, the family spent their time between Balloch and Finlarg. The oat meal consumed, deducting a quantity used as "horse corn," part of which here, as in England, was baked into loaves, was about 364 bolls. The malt, 207 bolls, (deducting a small quantity of "struck" barley used in the kitchen.) They used 90 beeves, ("marts," "stirks," or "fed oxen,") more than two-thirds consumed fresh; 20 swine; 200 sheep; 424 salmon, far the greater portion being from the Western rivers; 15,000 herrings; 30 dozen of "hard fish;" 1805 "heads" of cheese, new and old, weighing 325 stone; 49 stone of butter; 26 dozen loaves of wheaten bread; of wheat flour  $3\frac{1}{2}$  bolls. The wine brought from Dundee was claret and white wine, old and new, in no very large quantities, though it might be difficult to fix the exact contents of the "barrekens" and "rubbours." One kind, called "vlet" wine, may mean that brought home in flasks with oil at top, instead of corks. One barrel of English beer might be introduced to stimulate the native brewers to exertion by its rivalry. Of "spices and sweet meats," we find only notice on one occasion, of small quantities of saffron, mace, ginger, pepper, "raisins of cure," plumdamas, and one sugar loaf. No deer or game are entered this year; nor any poultry, probably from some omission in the system of accounting, which was then only beginning. In some subsequent extracts made on account of their detailing the provisions for two marriages in the family, (1621-26,) these omissions are supplied. The marriage of Elizabeth Campbell with the young laird of Drum, was on 4th December 1621. There was a considerable gathering of Dec-side gentry and Campbells, as well as "comers and goers." Besides the staple commodities, we find on this occasion entered, twenty capons, forty poultry, thirty geese, twelve wild-geese, twelve "meiss" of brawn, six "furches" (both haunches?) of red venison, eight roes, seven dozen of wildfowl, partridge and black game, three "birsell fowls," (turkeys?) of rabbits only eight; and we find now a greater variety of sea fish and red herrings, and reisted (smoked?) hams and mutton "louings" and salmon. At the wedding of "Jeilliane Campbell" with the Laird of Buckie, which took place on 18th June 1626, we find notice of trouts, wild-geese, (not easily to be had at that season,) three whole red deer and ten furches, (I fear and when other fish got scarce there was the "hard fish" or stock fish, which still forms an article of Scotch economy even in Protestant families. Cheese, counted either by weight or in "heads," was plentifully supplied by the "bow-men."

These books have a great additional interest from mentioning the guests visiting the family, and occasionally domestic occasions of more sumptuous housekeeping. It is matter of regret that room could not be found for more of these.

INVENTORIES.

The "INVENTORIES OF PLENISSING," beginning at 1598, are valuable for the history of Scotch manners and civilisation. Every article is tempting, and if there were room, we could be well pleased to attend "the Lady" with her aide-de-camp, "Magie Peter," in their review of the contents of "the great kist in the gallery wardrobe," and "the Lady's kist standing in her own garderobe." One entry in the "household garderobe" of four wolf skins, might oblige us to turn aside, if there were not to be other opportunities of noticing the last of the great beasts of prey in Britain. But we must pass by the caddois and coverings, the plaids and curtains, the sheets, board cloths, seruiettes and towels;<sup>1</sup> the carpets then not used for the floor, but for table-covers, gorgeous cushions, counter-cloths, stools, the table furniture and the array of kitchen implements required for the hospitality of Balloch.

Neither must I dwell upon the arms and accoutrements which the porter had in charge. The artillery was not formidable, though, probably, more than required in Highland warfare. The hand guns, muskets, hagbuts of snap-work, of rowet work, or of lunt<sup>2</sup> work, (match-locks,) prove the value in which they not in very good condition,) and seventeen roes; of claret, white wine, and "Spanish wine," aquavitæ, vinegar, &c.; for spiceries, pepper and ginger, sugar, cloves, cannel, (cinnamon), saffron.

<sup>1</sup> Let me notice in passing, that the ultimate fate of those linens was not, as now, the paper-maker's. When "broken," they fell to "the Nureis," or went to make wicks, either for candles of home manufacture, or lamps. There is no mention in these books of the purchase either of oil or candles.

<sup>2</sup> Lunt-work or match-work, a common English as well as a Scotch word. I find my transcriber and I have pertinaciously read and printed it lunit.

were held, by the minuteness of the descriptions of their ornaments, whether stocked with Brissel, (Brazil wood,) or inlaid with bone or with pearl, or gilt pieces with the Laird's arms. There is the usual array of arms, from the primitive hand-bow and its "bag of arrows," to horseman's harness with steel bonnets, plate gloves, corsletts, murrions of proof, steel targes, and two-handed swords. None of the names of arms seem to require explanation. There are Jedburgh staffs, and Lochaber axes, but there is nothing of "the ancient Highland broadsword." Andrea Ferrara's name is not found. A "running spear" seems to be a tilting spear, as a "wasp spear" undoubtedly was no weapon of mortal war, but a salmon spear or "leister." Among the porter's gear at Finlary, after a dire enumeration of prison furniture, great iron fetters, and long chains with their shackles, we find one name that suggests even more odious associations. The four "Glaslawis chargeit with four schaikills," seem to have been instruments of torture.<sup>1</sup> The "heading axe," which occurs more than once, and which seemed at one time to be the natural fate of the whole race of M'Gregor, is still to be seen in the Hall at Taymouth.

The most curious, as well as the most careful and formal of these inventories, is the one made up in 1640, when Sir Colin and his sons, a few months before his death, agreed to set aside certain articles as heir-looms. The jewels—the target of enamelled gold, set with three diamonds, four topazes or jacinths, a ruby, and a sapphire—the gift of King James V. ; the round jewel of gold, set with twenty-nine diamonds and four great rubies, and the diamond ring, both given to the gallant Sir Duncan by Queen Anne of Denmark ; even the fair silver brooch, set with precious stones, are, I fear, all gone. It is something if the talisman of the Knight of Rhodes is preserved. The Plate is very sumptuous for the time. There were not many houses in Scotland in 1640 which could set on the table twelve plates, twelve trenchers, and twelve "sasars" of silver. But the chief array for the "buffet" was in great "chargers," "basons," “lawers,” and all manners and sizes of goblets and cups of silver, plain and gilt or parcel gilt.<sup>1</sup> The arms set apart are field-pieces of copper and iron, and a few muskets and pistols; a pair of two-handed swords, (one with its hilt overlaid with velvet, evidently a sword of state for processions); three targets, two of steel and one of cork; and a quantity of body armour, all of plate. The furniture consisted of many gorgeous beds of silk and velvet, embroidered or plain, Arras and common hangings, velvet cushions for the kirk, and cushions of Turkey work, damask board-cloths, Dornik serviettes, and others of plainer sort. Carpets for the table, dishes of pewter, a “great acavitæ pot,” (a still,) kitchen furniture, twenty-four pictures of Kings and Queens, and thirty-four of lairds and ladies of Glenurquhay and other noblemen; the great “Genealogy board,” (painted by Jamesone); with clocks, organs in the chapel of Finlarg, and a harpsicord at Balloch. The deed also entailed two charter-chests, with iron bands (not their contents!); “Captain Gordon’s sword,” which no doubt had its history; and a considerable quantity of cattle and sheep.

COURT BOOKS.

The acts and proceedings of the Baron Courts, collected in 1621, will be found to present a fair view of the rural economy of the district. There are regulations for muirburn, summer pasture, peat-cutting, mills, smithies, and ale-houses; laws against poaching on moor and river; a rule that smacks of superstition, against cutting briars “but in the waxing of the moon.” Swine are proscribed; no quarter is given to rooks, hooded crows, and magpies. The Laird shows his determination to have trees about his tenants’ houses by numerous regulations; and tenants are bound, under high penalties, to give their cottars the comforts of fuel and kail-yards, “with corns conform.” Agriculture is stimulated by rules for sowing “uncouth” oats, or seed better than the common black oat of the Highlands; for collecting of “middens;” even for irrigating—“drawing water through the land”—long before the grand discovery of draining had been made. To avoid the devastation of Highland “speats,” the green-sward on the banks of rivers and burns is not to be broken. To save a different devastation, every tenant was obliged to make yearly four "croscats of iron" (probably some sort of dog-spear) for slaying of the wolf. That great enemy of the shepherd was not finally extirpated till the end of the century.

<sup>1</sup> The “little lang-shanked cups for aquavitæ” point to a different fashion from that of later times, when the “quaich” had no shank.

A few extracts are given from the records of the Baron Court, rather for the sake of shewing its form and jurisdiction than for any importance of the cases, civil or criminal. The legal antiquary will find relics of some antique law, which had disappeared long ago in lowland courts. Donald Taillour, in Morinch, having fallen in suspicion of stealing ten double angels and forty marks of silver, the Assize ordained him to cleanse himself thereof by the oaths of six persons out of twelve whom they would choose, or four persons of eight; and he accordingly cleansed himself by his compurgators, as the ancient law demanded, and went free.<sup>1</sup> In a court held at Killin, it was ordered that no "blocker" or dealer buy cattle from strangers, nor even from the neighbours dwelling between the ford of Lyon and Tyndrum, without sufficient "caution of burgh and hamer." This is the "borch of hamehald" required by the statute of William the Lion, and recognised in several of our older laws.<sup>2</sup>

There are some symptoms of starvation in Breadalbane, when Patrick M'Woyllen and the Widow M'Ewin are convicted of bleeding the laird's cattle, and John M'Inteir for letting M'Keissik's bairns die for hunger.<sup>3</sup>

The gear did not prosper with Donald Taillour in Morinch, (the same who was suspected for the double angels,) and he accused his neighbour N'Vane of bewitching him. She brought a pock of earth from Tomnayngell (the name sounds of spirits) to his house; since which, "his gear has not 'luckit' with him, and his corns grow not." The judge, with sense beyond the age, acquitted the woman at this time, but forbade the use of the pock of earth, "seeing it inclines to no good, but to an evil custom."<sup>4</sup>

There are many regulations and proceedings shewing the creeping in of that habit which has become our national reproach. Even so early as these entries, whisky, as well as ale, was too freely used; and, among other attempts to abate the nuisance, a curious law inflicts a penalty and disgraceful punishment for wives drinking in "brewsters'" houses without the company of their husbands.<sup>1</sup>

It has been doubted how old the practice of rod-fishing is. On 6th December 1632, his father becomes caution for Duncan Campbell in Creitgarrow, that he shall not burn a blaze, shoot a waspe, nor put out a wand on the water of Tay.<sup>2</sup>

MUSTER ROLLS.

Of the MUSTER ROLLS here printed, it may be sufficient to observe that they have all apparently been made to satisfy some requisition, and seem intended to convey no more information than was absolutely required.

The articles concluded by the barons and gentlemen of Argyll in 1638, on the eve of the great struggle, shew a forethought, a unity of purpose, and a determination to risk all for the cause, very unusual among our countrymen.

FEU-CHARTERS AND TACKS.

Out of some huge volumes in which the Lairds of Glenurchy registered the charters and leases granted to their vassals and tenants, a few have been selected for illustrating incidental points of character or custom. The first is a lease granted for keeping the Castle of Kilchurn, and shows the arrangement of its seneschal and his small garrison. Before that time (1550) it had ceased to be the chief or even the usual dwelling of the family. The second, a feu-charter, brings us acquainted with a race of hereditary "jongleurs," "rhymers," or "bards," holding their land by service in their craft.<sup>3</sup> Two leases here given

<sup>2</sup> P. 389.—The "blazing" the water, or killing salmon when drawn by the light of fires within sight and reach, is still too well known in the upper Highlands. A "waspe" spear is the same as the "leister" of the border Highlands. The wand or rod-fishing was, I hope, with fly.

<sup>3</sup> Some one more versed in Highland genealogies may tell us whether the Ewen who received this charter, was the origin of the M'EWENS who were hereditary Seanachies. The current popular history of the Campbells professes to be founded upon "the genealogical tree done by Niel M'Ewen, as he received the same from Eachern and are the only transactions I have met with among these papers, touching the management and produce of the deer forest.<sup>1</sup> The fifth charter was chosen from its giving a Churchman's view of the police of the country,—“Hibernica et rapinosa regio ubi incolæ vix terras laborare aut habitare ausint propter frequentes furum et latronum incursiones qui in speluncis illic latitant.” A lease of Ilan Puttychan gives liberty to set six small nets in the loch, but without slaying salmon or red fish ; and Donald M'Kerres has a lease of a half-merk land of Port Loch Tay, with steelbow and “bouage” according to custom, and a right to set three small nets upon the loch. Hew Hay and Cristiane Stennes served the ferry coble of the Cagell, and undertook to keep an honest hostelry at the coble croft, with sufficient ale and bread and other furnishing at all times in readines to serve the country, with greater provision for courts, conventions, or strangers. The Laird undertook to build them a hall and lofted chamber, with chimneys, doors and windows water tight, meet and convenient for such hospitality ; and also to put down rival hostellers and brewsters between Stroncombrie and Wood of Letterellane on the north side of the loch, and between Cronaltane and Ardrananycht in Ardtollonycht on the south ; and promised certain impracticable privileges of pre-emption of victuals.<sup>2</sup> The eighth deed is a specimen of an obligation of a tenant instead of rent to enter into deadly feud with the Clan Gregor, and to make slaughter upon them privily and openly. The removing of the tenants of Arcandknocquhane affords minute information of the “plenishing” of tenants' houses in Breadalbane. The reddendo of the tenth charter is curious,—besides £10 Scots and forty bolls of oatmeal, the vassal was to pay a gallon of sufficient aquavitæ, (the manufacture of his own still without doubt,) optimam chlamidem coloratam, which is translated “ane fyne hewed brakane,” and a sufficient “Cuddeich,” which, I believe, means a present given in token of vassalage.

Artt M'Ewens, his father and grandfather, as they had the same from their predecessors, who for many years were employed to make up and keep such records.” The “Arnoldus filius Eugenii” of this charter, may be “Artt M'Ewen” Latinized, and it is not improbable that the hitherto varying patronymic, should be fixed with reference to the first of the race who obtained a feudal title to his land.

Three leases are granted to craftsmen, the builder of the Laird's park dikes; the smith of the castle—who took his name from his calling, Patrick Gow; and thirdly, to Andro Kippen the gardener of Balloch, whose contract to entertain the garden and its knots, borders and alleys, orchard and kaleyard, and to rear all sorts of flowers, herbs and strawberries, as well as plums, cherries, geans, apples and pears,—presents to the imagination a curious contrast with the present appearance of the lawn on which the castle stands—the very site where Kippen must have “led his fulzie,” and collected his “middens” before the peat-house door.<sup>1</sup>

Some of the deeds are given to show the care of the stud of brood mares in Glenloch, which, like the other pasture farms, is here managed on steel-bow;<sup>2</sup> and in one, a tenant on Loch Fyne pays a part of his rent in herrings, and furnishes the Earl's family with white fish and shell fish during their residence at Castle Kilchurn.<sup>3</sup>

Black John Crerare, a name long after associated with Highland sport, has a lease in 1663 of the merk land of Pitmakie and the sheeling of Corriegoir, his service being to be fowler to the Laird, and to go to the hills with a sufficient lying dog and fowling nets, and kill wild-fowl and moor-fowl of all kinds, and to train up a fowling dog for the use of the Laird.<sup>4</sup>

LETTERS.

The last of these selections for the antiquities of Highland life, are a few letters chosen from a vast quantity at Taymouth. I have avoided all which bear on historical and public events, as beyond the scope of this collection. Even the documents touching the immortal feud with the unfortunate Clan Gregor, I have put aside.<sup>5</sup> It is sufficient to point to the Taymouth charter-room,

<sup>5</sup> A long letter of Lord Breadalbane to his cousin Barcaldine in 1706, preserves the tradition of a characteristic story of King James VI.:—“It is reported of King James VI., when he did see the Earl of Argyll coming into the Abbey close, after Glenlivatt, (the battle of Benrinnes, 1594,) but with a very small train, he asked, although he knew, who it was, and being told that it was the Earl of Argyll, his answer was—‘Fair fall thee, Geordie, (Huntly,) for sending him home like a subject!’” as full of the genuine materials of Scotch history from the Reformation to the Revolution.

The first letter printed is a characteristic exhortation and encouragement by the Laird to the keeper of his Castle of Glenurchy who had lost his geir by his service. There are two letters concerning supplies of venison and game to the Court, the first on occasion of the christening of Prince Henry, the second when Charles I. was about to visit Scotland in 1633. One letter speaks of terriers and fox-hunting as affording sport in Scotland in 1631. Another is printed only as giving a notice of Capercailzie in 1651, which soon after disappeared from Scotland, until restored in the present generation to the woods of Breadalbane. Several letters here given, and others omitted, have reference to the famous white hind of Corrichiba, which King James VI. greatly desired to secure, and sent his foresters to attempt it. Mr. Bowie only informs us that "the said Englishmen saw the hind in Corrichiba on 22 February 1622." The correspondence shows that they failed in their enterprise, and also that they spoke highly of the hospitality of the country. It is not from themselves we learn that the Highland drink was too potent for the Southron.

Before leaving the subject of game and deer, I may mention an early notice of the venison of Breadalbane. The account of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland for August 1506, has the following entry:—

"Item, payit to the Comptrollair for iiij barrellis to send to Sir Duncane Campbell to salt venisone in, to send in Spanyee,	ix s.
"Item, for carying of the samyn to Lochtay,	vij s."

It is plain that the Catholic King had heard of Breadalbane venison, and, despairing to taste it as it should be eaten, was content to have it salted!

The correspondence about fir seed sent to Lord Lauderdale and the Marchioness of Hamilton, shows an early attention to planting of that kind. The letter of the Marchioness, here printed, and others of her ladyship at Taymouth, are characteristic memorials of that remarkable woman, and serve well to illustrate Jameson's curious picture of her.

The last letter of the collection is from Master William Bowie, the inditer of the Black Book, who here figures as the instructor of John and Duncan, the sons of Robert Campbell of Glenfalloch, afterwards Sir Robert of Glenurchy.<sup>1</sup>

One word of omissions before closing this Preface, already unreasonably long. A collection from a charter-room seems incomplete without the charters; and those at Taymouth, since 1432, would illustrate not only the possessions of the family, but the older tenures of the whole neighbourhood. But a tolerable selection of these would also require more room than could be afforded here. Therefore, with many masses of letters of correspondence, (a large part of the latter transcribed,) these have been for the present wholly set aside.

Among the charters of lands, were found some documents of a less common character, and affecting less substantial rights, — viz., the privileges attached to the custody of a certain relic of St. Fillan. Fillan, the son of Kentigerna, was of old reverence in the valleys of Breadalbane, and his monastery in Glendochart was still of such consequence in the time of William the Lion, that the Abbot, whether then a churchman or secularised,<sup>2</sup> was named among the magnates of power to support the operation of a particular law

beyond the reach of common legal process.<sup>1</sup> It was a century later that a relic of St. Fillan is said (by Boece) to have been the subject of a notable miracle, which Bruce turned to account for encouraging his soldiers at Bannockburn.<sup>2</sup> The story may be received as evidence of the reverence paid to St. Fillan in the historian's time. That it continued afterwards, we learn from the following documents, though, I fear, they shew that his relics were degraded to the purpose of tracing stolen goods. The particular one which forms the subject of these instruments, the Coygerach, was known within the present generation in the hands of the family of Jore or Dewar, who so early vindicated its possession. It is the head of a staff or crozier of a Bishop or mitred Abbot, of silver gilt, elaborately and elegantly ornamented with a sort of diapered chasing. It is described and figured in the Transactions of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, Vol. III., p. 290; and in Dr. Wilson's Archæology of Scotland, p. 664.<sup>3</sup>

Two of these documents have been printed before,<sup>4</sup> but from imperfect and faulty copies. They are now given from the originals :—

JAMES R.

The Coygerach of St. Fillan was long afterwards known in the Highlands of Perthshire. The last of these deeds was registered as a probative writ at Edinburgh, 1st November 1734 ; and M. Latocnaye, who made a tour in Britain in 1795, gives this notice of the Relic,—“ Ayant vu l'annonce d'une fameuse relique, en la possession d'un paysan aux environs, nous avons demandé à la voir. Elle ressemble assez au haut bout d'une crosse d'évêque, et est d'argent doré. Le bon homme qui nous l'a montré, et qui gagne quelque peu d'argent avec elle, vraisemblablement pour augmenter notre intérêt, nous a dit très sérieusement, que quand les bestiaux étaient enrégés, il suffisait de leur faire boire de l'eau passée par l'intérieur de sa relique ; l'eau bouillone sur le champ quand le remède ne veut pas opérer, (d'où on pourrait conclure qu'il opère souvent,) et que l'on venait de plus de cent milles chercher de son eau. . . Quoiqu'il en soit, j'ai été charmé de trouver une relique parmi les Presbytériens.”<sup>1</sup>

The Relic, it is believed, has been for some years in Canada, but whether it retains its virtues in the New World is unknown.

Such are the materials which a Highland charter-room has afforded for illustrating some centuries of Highland life. The volume will not be slighted as a mere collection of antiquarian curiosities, if it is found to throw light on the state of property and the institutions of an interesting district, and to exhibit early forms of life and progressive changes of manners in its pastoral people. While there is enough of romance in the glimpses here opened of the rough life of "the good old time," it is pleasant to think that while much is changed, every change has been for the better. The country, which these papers show us in so wild a state of lawless insecurity, has for the last two centuries steadily improved; and the progress has not been more marked in the face of the country than in the moral and physical condition of the people, and their social happiness.

Promenade autour de la Grande Bretagne, par un Officier Français Emigré, p. 294. Edinb. 1795.

Item, in the monethe of October in anno 1615 Sir Duncane Campbell of Glenurquhay Knicht causit put fellow deir and cunnyngis within the Ile of Inchsaile.

Item, in the monethe of October anno 1615 the laird of Laweris past by to Londoun, and desyrit of his Maiestie that he wald writ to the Counsall desyring the Counsall to send for the landis lordis of the Clangregor that they wald grant ane contributioun of fyiftie pund out of the merkland, and his Maiestie wald find ane way that naine of the Clangregor sould troubill aney of thair landis nor posses thame, bot that the landislordis sould bruik thame paceablie; for Laweris luit his Maiestie to wonderstand that, gif his Hines wald grant him that contrabutioun, that he sould gett all theis turnis satled: quhairin trewlie Laweris haid nather pouar nor moyan to do it. The Counsall wreit for the landislordis, sic as the Erle of Linlithgow, the laird of Glenurquhay, the laird of Weyme, Alexander Schaw of Cambusmoir and Knokhill. The rest of the landislordis came not. The Chancellare inquiryt of thame that wes present, gif they wald grant to the contrabutioun, quhilhis all zeildit to, saikand Glenurquhay, quha said he wald not grant thairto, seing his Maiestie haid burdnit him to concur withe the Erle of Argyle in persewing of the Clangregor, becaus he knew he wald get moir skaithe be the Clangregor nor all the landislordis wald. Heirefter the Counsall wreit for the landislordis, and desyrit thame to pey the contrabutioun, and his Maiesties will was that it sould be givin to the laird of Laweris. Glenurquhay refusit be reassoun that he nevir zeildit to the contrabutioun, and the rest of the landisfordis that wes absent the first Counsall day that the contrabutioun wes grantit refusit the contrabutioun in lykmaner. Sua the laird of Laweris wes disapointit of the contrabutioun. Glenurquhay quarrellit the laird of Laweris and his breithreine that he sould haibe tain sic interpyfes in hand by his advyse, for to perturb the laird of Glenurquhies landis, seeing that [he] wes the laird of Glenurquhies wassell and kinsman cum of his hous, and als his susteris sone, and that, quhen Laweris hous wald haibe wraikitt in Laweris fatheris tyme, the laird of Glenurquhay tuik in his mother, his breithrein, and susteris in his hous, and saikit the hous of Laweris fra rowein and wraik.

Item, in the moneth of December in anno 1615 the laird of Laweris socht ane suit of the Counsall for interteineing of thrie or four scoir of the bairnis of the Clangregor, and desyrit the Counsell to burdein the landisfordis with the sowme of tua thousand merkis in the moneth thairfoir. The laird of Glenurquhay desyrit the laird of Laweris and his brethrin not to truble him with that suit, seing that they knew that he had gottin moir skaithe of the Clangregor nor all the subiectis of the kingdome, and that he had done moir service to his Maiestie nor all the rest in oppressing of the Clangregor. Laweris refusit that Glenurquhay sould haibe aney curtassie, bot that he sould pay as the rest did for interteniment of the bearnis of the Clangregor. For the quhilk refusall Glenurquhay mett withe the landisfordis, sic as the Erle of Cullibardin, the Erle of Lintlithgow, the Erle of Perth, my Lord of Meddertie, and the rest of the landisfordis, and they tuk the burding vpon thame selfis for ane space to interteiney the bairnis, quhairby Laweris wes disapointit of his tua thousand merkis.

Item, thairefter the Erle of Argyle gatt of his Maiestie the fynnis of the receptaris of the Clangregor, and the laird of Laweris and his breithrein for the tyme beand daylie waitaris on vpone the Erle of Argyle gat the fourt pairt of the fynnis to thame selfis. Glenurquhay desyrit the laird of Laweris and his breithreine that his tennentis sould not be trublit in the fynnis, seand that he and his tennentis haid maid moir service to his Maiestie on the Clangregor nor all the rest of the subiectis in Scotland, and haid gottin moir skaith be thame nor thame all, and that it wes no reassoun that his men sould be fynned, seinge his countray wes heallalie brint and sundrie of his tennentis slaine in that service. Laweris and his breithrein ansueris wes that they wald grant no courtassie to Glenurquhay: quhairvponne Glenurquhay possit vp to Londoun to his Maiestie, quhair the Erle of Argyle wes for the presentt, and declarit to his Maiestie how that his tennentis, notwithstanding of thair guid service and great skaith, wes pressed to be fynned, quhilk his Maiestie declarit wes no reassoun, and sua writ down to the Counsall desyring [that none] of Glenurquhies tennentis or seruendis sould be trublit with oney of the foirsaidis fynnis. To conclud, the hous of Laweris hes bein verie wngraitfull to the hous of Glenurquhay at all vther tymes.

Item, in the monethe of anno 1615, nochtwithstanding that the laird of Glenurquhay haid charter and leasing of the sex merkland of Glenamond callit
the laird of Laweris beand bot taxsman of the said sex merkland to vniquhile Andro Coscheoche of Honzie, and payit to him sex merk meale and dewtie thairfoir, as als payit the laird of Glenurquhay the foirsaidis meallis for the space of ten or tuell zeiris efter the said vniquhile Androw his deceis, and the laird of Glenurquhay conteinowinge the vptaking of his meallis for ten or tuell zeiris, pairtlie throw negligence and ourlicht, and pairtlie throw curtassie, the laird of Laweris denyit plainlie that euer he payit aney dewtie for theis landis ather to the said vniquhile Androw Coscheoche or zit to the laird of Glenurquhay, bot alleidgit that theis landis wer pairtis and pertinentis of vtheris his landis adjacent thairto, notwithstanding that the doubill of the first tak thatt euer the said vniquhile Androw Coscheoche gaibe to the said laird of Laweris of theis landis wes opinlie presentit and subscriuit be the said laird of Laweris and the said vniquhile Androw Coscheoche. And the foirsaid laird of Laweris possessis as zit the said sex merkland moit fallie, wnjuslie, and wnhonestly.

Item, in the zeir of God ane thowland sex hundreth and fyftein zeiris the foirsaid laird of Laweris callit James Campbell tuk the forrest of Binnoir in Glendoquhart ober the laird of Glenurquhies head moit wnkynndlie and vnjuslie and unnaturaly, by his bandis of fidelitie quhairby he wes bund that he sould nather tak landis, possessiounes nor takis quhilkis the laird of Glenurquhy possessis; quhilk forrest of Binmoir hes bein brukitt and possessit be the lairdis of Glenurquhay thir hundrethe and foirscoir zeiris bygane. Sua, sen thir greate wrangis wes done be the laird of Laweris [to] the lairdis off Glenurquhay, by deutie and all resoun, they will enter into no lobe and freindschip withe

 the hous of Laweris quhill theis wrangis be reparit.

Item, the said Sir Robert in anno 1648 gave for repairing his lodgeing in Perth the soume of tuo hundreth punds.

In the zeiris of God 1644 and 1645 the laird of Glenbrughay his whole landis and esteatt betuixt the foord of Lyon and point of Lesmoir weir brunt and destroyt be James Grahame sountymes Earle of Montrois, and Alexander McDonald sone to Coll M'Donald in Colofna, with their associattis. The tennants ther quholl cattell weir takine away be these enimies, and ther cornes, houses, plenisching, and whole insight weir brunt. And the said Sir Robert, pressing to gett the inhabitants repairit, warrit xl s. Scottis vpon the bigging of eberie cuple in his landis within the shirredoomes of Perth and Argyll, and als warrit seed cornes vpon his awine chairges to the most of his inhabitants in Perthshyre. Pett by the providence of God his garisone housis, to wit, Balloch, Ile of Lochtay, Finlarg, Auchallader, Castellkylchorne, and Barchaltan, weir keipit from these enimies.

Notandum, that Johne M'Dab fiar of Bowane, and Alexander M'Inlay M'Dab in Inschewine, with the whole Clannab, joynit with the forsaid enimies, and took in the yll of Lochdochart, quhich yll of Lochdochart was wiolently takine from them againe in anno 1646, and brunt throw ther default.

The occatioun of James Grahame, countymes Earle of Montrois, and Alexander M'Donald, ther malice against the said Sir Robert and his freindis and cuntrie people, wes because the said Sir Robert joynnit in covenant with the Kirk and Kingdome of Scotland in maintaineing the trew religioun, the Kingis Majestie his authoritie, and lawis and libertie of the Kingdome of Scotland, and because the said Sir Robert went in persone tuxce to the north, first at the intaking of the toune of Aberdeen in the zeir of God 1638, and nirt to suppress these that brunt and spoyllit Monros, and also because the said Sir Robert altogether refusit to assist the said James Grahame and Alexander M'Donald ther malicious doings in the Kingdome of Scotland.

So that the laird of Glenbrughay and his cuntrie people ther los, quhat in Perthshyre and quhat in Argyleshyre, exceeds the soume of tuell hundreth thowland merkis.

By and attour the killing of Williame Campbell of Glenfalloch, sone to the said Sir Robert, and the number of 40 able men with him, at Stirling in the moneth of September 1648, and also by the killing of the number of 200 men and abow, quhat in England and quhat in Scotland, at severall tymes before.

Item, the said Sir Robert did deburs and spent at the tuo severall tymes he wes with the armie in the north the soume of thrie thowland fyve hundreth merkis.

Item, the said Sir Robert, being chosin commissioner for the schirredome of Argyll to attend the parliament in Edinburgh, first in anno 1643, and nixt in annis 1646 and 1647, did depurs and spent dureing his abode ther at the said severall tymes the soume of fyve thowland merkis, and gatt nothing from the shirredome of Argyll for his said attendance.

Item, in these said Parliaments, holdine annis 1646 and 1647, ther wes adit in favoris of the said

Sir Robert and Johne his sone the soume of fyve thowland pund Stirline to be giwen to them for ther losz sustanit be them and ther tennants in Perthshyre in the publiſt serbice, and that of the last 100 thowland pund Stirline grantit be the parliament of England to the Scottish armie, togidder also with ane propoitione of threttie thowland pund Stirline grantit be the saids parliaments for the losz in the shirredome of Argyll. And farder, ther wes promised to them the soume of ten thowland pund Scottis to be payit to the publiſt in Scotland. And mair, these saids parliament promised to pay to losz of ther tennantrie according as the rest of the tennants in this Kingdome getts for ther losz. Off quihis soumes and promises ther is nothing as yett gottine nor performit, by and attour the losz of ther quholl rents.

Item, in the zeir of God 1648 Johne Earle of Loudoune, High Chancellour of Scotland (in the moneth of November) doeing for Dame Juliane Campbell, relict of vniquhill Sir Coline Campbell eight laird of Glenbrquhay, for the yeirly dewties of hir conjunct ties restand awand to hir annis 1644, 1645, 1646, 1647, and 1648, extending in principallis annuellis, and penulties to the soume of fourtie thowland punds or therby, the said Johne Earle of Lowdoune, being assignay to the said Dame Jeliane to thes soumes in respect she is father sifter to the ladie Lowdoune, did compryse the laird of Glenbrquhay his whole eastteatt, and areffit his whole dewties for these soumes forsaid.

Item, in the moneth of December 1648 Dame Elizabeth Sinclair, relict of vniquhill Sir Duncane Campbell seuent laird of Glenbrquhy, did in lykmaner raise compryseings for hir conjunct tie penulties and annuells extending to the soume of tyme for his soume of tuentie thowland punds with the penulties and annuells.

Item, in lykmaner, Sir Chairles Erskine of Cambuskennall raiset ane compryseing the said

Item, in the said moneth of December 1648 Mr. Rodger Howatt advocatt in Edinburgh raisit ane compryseing for his soume of tuentie thowland merkis with the penulties and annuells.

Item, the said tyme also Johne Short in Stirline raisit ane compryseing for his soume of aucht thowland merkis with the penulties and annuells.

DUNCAN LAIDEUS' alias MAKGREGOURIS TESTAMENT.

Quhen passit wes the tyme of tendir age,
And Youth with Insolence maid acquentance,
And Wickitnes enforced Evill courage,
    Quhill Micht with Crueltie maid alliance,
    Then Falshead tuke on him the governance
And me betaucht ane houshald for to gyde
Callit Evill cumpanie baith to gang and ryde.

My maister houshald wes heich Oppressioun,
    Reif my stewart that cairit of na wrang,
Murthure, Slauchtir, ay of ane professioun,
    My cubicularis hes bene thir yearis lang,
    Recept that oft tuik in mony ane fang
Wes portar the yettis to oppin wyde,
And Couatice wes chalmerlane at all tyde.

Conspiracie, Inwy, and Fals repoirt
Wer my prine counsalouris lewe and deare,
Then Rubberie the poepill to extoirt
And Commone thift tuke on thame sa the steir
That Treuth in my presence durst not appeir,
For Falsheid had him ay at mortall feid,
And Thift brocht Lawtie finalie to deid.

Oppressioun cleikit Gude reule be the hair
And suddanlie in ane presoun him flang,
And Crueltie caist Pitie our the stair,
Quhill Innocence wes murthurit in that thrang.
Then Falshead said he maid my hous richt strang
And furnist weill with meikill wrangus geir,
And baid me neither God nor man to feir.

This cative cumpanie had sa in cure
Baith my bodie and saule in governance,
That I dred nocht Fortunes miseventure
Nor of the warld the doubill inconstance.
But now, alace ! richt sone Dame Variance
Hes maid ane change and brocht me to rwyne
For my demeritis to gar me thoill pyne.

Bot now, alace ! the time approchis neir
That the saule fra the bodie mon depairt ;
Quhairfoir I pray yow that be present heir
Vnto my counsall now ye will aduert,
Syne schaw it to my complices eftirwart :
I wat thai will say, ' He that suld hawd ws
Is gane for cuir, gude Duncane Lawdus.'

First in my youthhead I began to deale
With small oppressionis and tendir lambis,
Syne with Lawtie I brak baith band and seill,
Cleikit couplit kiddis with thair damis,
Eftir fangit beafe with greit hammis,
Then culd I nocht stand content of ane kow
Without I gat the best stirk of the bow.

Sync rang I furth in Tyranie alway
Slayand just men that neur did offence,
Quhill mony complaint come baith nycht and day
To King James the Ferd that royall prince,
Quha gaif strait command without residence
Me to searche and seik in euerie place
Quhill I wer fund and brocht vnto His Grace.

The loud corrinoch then did me exile
 Throw Lorne, Argyle, Menteith and Braidalbane :
 Bot, lyke ane fox with mony wrink and wyle
 Fra the hundis eschapis oft onslane,
 Sa did I then, syne schupe me to remane
 In Lochabir with gude Ewin Alesoun,
 Quhair that we wan mony ane malesoun.

My tarie thair wes bot for ane schoirt quhyle,
 Quhen hastalie on me wes maid ane chace
 Be vmquhile Archibald Erle of Argyle :
 Syne hitherwart agane I maid ane race,
 Quhair me betyde richt sone ane cairfull cace,
 Tane lyke ane tratoure without moir delay
 Be Schir Duncane Campbell of Glenvrquhay.

This wyis man knew richt weill my wickit mynd,
 And sone gart cast me into ane dungeoun deip
 Fast into fetteris fessonit and sair pynd,
 Quhair, as I list bot litill for to sleip,
 Disparit of grace [I] ay did murne and weip :
 Drownit in sorrow wes baith my mynd and cheir
 Quhill eftirwart the fate approched neir.

The dolorous day and dulefull houre
Of Floudoun feild and battell intestyne
That royall roy, of cheualrie the floure,
With infinite nobillis brocht vnto rwyne.
This gentill knyght with ane lordlie tryne
Vnto that stoure valiantlie did pretend,
Quhair by Destanie schapin wes his end.

The tedious tydingis throucht this realme ran,
The greit defeat and finall distructioun
Off oure King with mony worthy man :
This hard I all, liand in deip dungeoun :
I thocht me then half out of my presoun,
For I did ay, as dois the meikill Devill,
Crabit of gude and cuir blyith of evill.

Delinerit then of danger and of deid,
Lattin agane vnto my libertie
By help of freindis keparis of that steid,
To quhame I promeist ane pensioun yeirlie,
Bot in guid faith my intent wes treulie
Neuir worde to keip of that promes than,
Nor yit sensyne maid to na vther man.

Then be the way me haistalie thair metis
My companions swift as ony suallowis,
For greit blythnes sittis doun and greittis,
Sayand, "Maister, weilecum be Alhallous,
Na we be hangit heich vpon ane gallous,
Gif we be nocht blyther of yow alane
Nor we had that baith God and Sanct Phillane."

"Quhat tydingis, schirris," quod I, "fra the hoist?"
Quod thai, "In guid faith we byde not for to lane,
The King with mony worthie man is loist,
Baith Erle Archibald and Schir Duncane slane."
"Off thai tydingis," quod I, "I am richt fane,
For, had the knyght leavit, or yit the lorde,
Thai had me wirriit stark deid in ane corde."

"Now, gude fallowis, harkin quhat I say to yow,
This cuntrie think I for to reule my self,
Be trew to me all thairfoir I pray yow,
And we among ws ay sall pairt the pelf,
And rype in faith mony pour wedois skelf,
For scho sall say that Duncane and his men
Hes not hir left the valoure of ane hen."

Then ansuerit thai all with ane voce attanis,
    “ Bot gif we do as thow biddis ws ay
The devill tak ws, saule, body and banis,
    Quik vnto hell withouten moir delay.”
    I hering thame thir wordis glaidlie say,
Sik curage culd into my mynd inress,
And sone began the commonis to oppress.

Lyke ane wolfe greadie and insatiabill
    Devoring scheip with mony bludie box,
To the pœpill I wes als terribill,
    Reiffand fra thame mony ane kow and ox :
    War the gray meir in the fettir lox
At Johne Vpalandis dur knit fast aneuch,
Vpone the morne he mist hir to the pleuch.

My tyme this furth in wickitnes indurit,
    Seing thair wes nan me to correct,
The King wes young, the lawis wer obscurit,
    Than thocht I not my tyme for to neglect ;
    Mony ane kow and meir I did collect,
Conquest all by oppressioun, reif, and thift,
Quhill eftirwart that King James the Fift

Began into this regioun for to ring.
 Maist circumspect with princelie governance,
 With manlie hart began this awfull King
 Trespassouris to pvnische with cruell vengeance
 Quhilkis to his liegis had done greit offence.
 Sa mony hang vpone gallousis naikit,
 For feare of him the out Ilis quaikit.

This subtile King send furth with mony trane
 Spyis to se in quhat land I hantit,
 To him thai, " Forsuith in Braidalbane
 Yon theif is with mony lymmer plantit."
 Then thocht he sone that we suld be dantit.
 Knawand his mynd to be gevin in sik soirt,
 To Lochabir agane I maid resoirt.

I had tareit bot schoirt quhile in that steid
 Quhen I wes outlaw and put vnto the horne:
 Then wist I nocht quhat hoill to hyde my heid,
 Full oft wareit the houre that I wes borne,
 Traisting richt sone myself to be forlorne,
 Hearing of the schairp law and justice
 Quhilk I luiffit on na maner of wyis.

Death that sparis na creature on lyve,
Wrocht be dame Nature in this aerth adoun,
Hes tane this King of the warld belyve,
And him bereft his septoure and his croun.
Scotland, thow art the vnhappie regioun,
Thow hes greit caus for to murne and weip
Sen he is gane wes wonnt the kow to keip.

My febill bodie stowpit than in age,
Of dreidfull death abyding ay the houre,
Wex, as me thoct, of xxx yeir of age,
Hering the reuthful cryis and clamoure,
Lamenting soir that prince of hie honoure.
Me thoct richt few that his death regratit,
Bot the pour commonis, richt weill I wat it.

My cheif and freindis then I gart convene
To ane priue counsall all thegidder,
Quhilk the Clanlaurent full soir nicht mene.
The caus thairof ye may weill consider :
In the Passioun oulk into Balquhidder
Sevin and tuentie we slew into that place
Be fyre and suorde, thai gat na vther grace.

I gart M'Gregoure suirlye vndirstand
 The Clandonuquhy wer gadderit him aganis :
 Strowane thair cheif in Strathbraan we fand,
 Or he was wer, we wer about his wanis ;
 With felloun fyre we brint vp all attanis,
 His seruandis slane and murthurit thair in steid,
 Him self captiue away with ws culd leid.

In evill intent and deidis detestabill
 Seing fortune this algait with ws rin,
 I drew ane draucht I wat mair treasonabill
 By tentatioun of Sathan me within,
 That Ganyelon culd not siclike begin,
 Suppois he in treasone past all vther :
 In gude faith I micht be callit his brother.

With mynd peruers and fraudulent ingyne
 I gart Makgregoure wickitlie pretend
 The hous of Glenvrquhay to bring to rwyne.
 Vpone ane nycht to Glenlyoun as thai did wend,
 Baith young and auld that of that hous was kend
 With suddan fyre we thocht for to persew :
 Bot thai wer wyis, and weilloure treasoun knew.

Had we gottin oure will in thir thingis,
This cuntray we thoct oure selffis for to gyde ;
We schupe to fie, bot we wantit wingis ;
Bot he fra quhame na thing that we may hyde
Hes sene oure myndis sa extollit in pryde,
Quhen we trowit best to cum to oure desyre,
The brig brak and we fell in the myre.

Makgregoure, of quhame sa mony stude aw,
Out of this warld richt suddanlie can fair.
Quha suld traist in fortune ony thraw !
For heir the day, the morne ye wat not quhair ;
Lyke as the clude discendis frome the air
And haistalie returnis into nocht,
Frome hie estait sa man full law is brocht.

Oure freyndis not litill the cais did lament,
Seing the want of sik ane one as he.
With fenyeit fair alway I stude content,
Traisting my self Makgregoure for to be.
Yit at the least thair tutoure thai maid me :
Thair wit wes waik, or ellis thai wantit sleip,
Thai gaif the wolf the wedder for to keip.

By office this to dignitie promouit,
 I grew sa heich into my awin consait,
 With srheud lymmaris wickitlie contrafit,
 In hoill and cave wald ly quhill it wer lait,
 And in the nycht the loud corrinoch, God wait,
 Wes at oure taill with mony roustie akis,
 We had the ky, and thai gat bot the glaikis.

The pour pepill I put in sik ane feir
 Quhill in thair hartis thai wer wonder fane
 To gif me yeirlic ane pairt of thair geir.
 Fra Sanctiohnestoun west vnto Strathphillane,
 In diueris places I bid not for to lane,
 My messingeris wer ansuerit quhair thai went ;
 My purches wes bettir nor my set rent.

The Erle of Argyle than I saw extreme
 Halding his justice with schairp correctioun.
 I dred he wald vnto the death me deme
 For the Clanlaurent put to deiection,
 Quha wer his men vndir his protectioun.
 Be the Buchquhilchanon that ye weill know :
 I luiffit neur justice nor yit law.

The devill that is ay imaginative,
Seduceand ws dailie to tentatioun,
Quhen that I nicht levit in peax my lyve,
Gart me newlie mak inchoatioun,
Off cruell murthure on my awin natioun,
By the slauchtir of Allaster Ower I mene
Quhilk hes me brocht into full mekill tene.

Then wes I chargit to vndirly the law,
My sone and I syne baith put to the horne.
To gar the cuntray trow I stude na aw,
I maid thairat bot derisioun and scorene,
And began to reif, steale, oppres, and some
With sindrie lymmaris richt wickit and stout ;
Bot ane schoirt quhile with me lastit that rout.

For sum wer tane and headit of my fallous,
Sum pitiouslie pynit with ane cord,
Syne set vp heich vpon ane gay gallous,
Quhilk wes ane blissit sacrifice to our Lorde,
And richt acceptabill I dar stand ford,
For, gif he be scant of ky in hevin,
Thai will him bring I wat ilk nycht ellevin.

Now haue I shoirtlie yow rehersit heir
How I my tyme in this warld hes spendit.
Weill I wat it is mair than fyftie yeir
Sen I first to wickitnes intendit.
The tyme is schoirt, alace ! now for to mend it,
Quhairfoir I dreid richt sone accusit to be,
Without the Lord be mercifull to me.

My deare freindis, consider this mater weill,
And in youre mynd exempill tak of me :
Traist not in fortune with her fickill quheill,
Quhen ye least wene, sonest will scho flie :
Put not youre hoip in wardlie vanitie,
For manis stait in aerth is variabill,
The flesche bruckill, the feind deceauabill.

First dreid youre God, syne follow his command,
Youre prince and reularis of the law obey,
With lawtie youre lyfe sustene in ilk land,
For lawtie is of grace the very key,
With youre maister be wonder laith to pley,
Oppres to pouir na way with violence
Leist God thairof tak haistie vengeance.

Be not the takaris of na wrangus geir,
Nor in youre hous be na way receipt it ;
Bettir is of taking in tyme forbeir
Nor to restoir quhen ye may not get it.
To luif youre nyctboure ye are addettit
Nixt youre God ; and how may ye than do baith
To luif him weill and do to him na skaith.

Off diueris eventuris I have yow tauld,
And how I eschapit oft throw Dame Fortune,
All thing luckit with me as myself wald,
I eschapit fra tua kingis that bure the croun,
And governouris and lordis of gret renoun :
Eftir all, Colene of Glenvrquhay larde
Had can to gif me my lattir rewarde.

The tyme is schoirt that I have now onspent,
Off temporall gude nocht I do posseid,
Quhill I have space I will mak my testament.
My spirituall gude I leif it into deid
Spirituall men for me to sing and reid,
For weill I wat thai will thair richtis haif,
And I wald pleas thame alsueill as the laif.

To my Curat negligence I resigne,
 Thairwith his parochinaris for to teache :
 Ane vther gift I leif him als condigne,
 Sleuth with ignorance, sendill for to preche,
 The saullis he committis for to bleitche
 In purgatorie quhill thai be weschin clene,
 Pure religioun thairbie for to sustene.

To the Vicar I leif diligence and cure
 To tak the vpmest claith and the kirk kow
 Mair nor to put the corps in sepulture.
 Haue pour wedo sex gryis and ane sow,
 He will have ane to fill his bellie fow :
 His thocht is mair vpon the pasche fynis
 Nor the saullis in purgatorie that pynis.

Oppressioun the Persone I leif vntill
 Pour menis corne to hald vpon the rig
 Quhill he get the teynd alhail at his will,
 Suppois the barnis thair bread suld go thig.
 His purpois is na kirkis for to big :
 Sa fair ane barne tyme God hes him sendin,
 Thir sevin yearis the queir will ly vnmendin.

I leif vnto the Deyne dignitie but fail,
With greit attendence quhilk he sal not mis,
Fra adulteraris tak the buttock maill ;
Gif ane man to ane madin gif ane kiss,
Get he not geir, thai sall not cum to bliss :
His wynnyng is maist throw fornicatioun,
Spending it syne with siclike occupatioun.

I leif vnto the Prioure for his part
Gluttony him and his monkis to feid ;
With fer bettir will to drink ane quart,
Nor on the Bible ane cheptoure for to reid.
Yit ar thai wyis and subtile into deid,
Fenyeis thame pouir and hes greit sufficence,
And takis welth alway with greit patience.

I leif the Abbot pride and arrogance,
With trappit mawles in the court to ryde,
Not in the closter to mak residence,
It is na honoure thair for him to byde,
Bot erar for ane bischoprik to prouide,
For weill ye wat ane pouir benifice
Of ten thousand mark may not him suffice.

To the Bischop his fre will I allege
    Becaus thair [livis] na man him to blame
Fra secular men he will him replege,
    And weill ye wat the Pape is fer fra hame.
    To preche the gospell he thinkis schame,
Suppois sum tyme it wes his professioun,
Rather nor for to sit vpone the sessioun.

I leif my flatterie and fals dissembling
    Vnto the Freris that sae weill can fleitche,
With mair proffit throw ane mariage making
    Nor all the Lentrane in the kirk to preche :
    Thai glois the scripture euer quhen thai teache,
Moir in intent the auditouris to pleis
Nor the trew worde of God for to appeis.

Thir giftis that Dame Nature hes me lent
    I haue disponit heir as ye may sie :
It neur wes nor yit is myne intent
    That trew kirkmen get ocht belangis me,
    Bot [them] that hantis huredome and harlattrie,
Gluttony, inwy, couatice and pryde,
My executouris I mak thame at this tyde.

Adew, all freindis, quhill eftir that we meit
I can not tell you quhair nor in quhat place,
Bot as the Lorde disponis for my spreit,
Quha is the well of mercie and of grace,
That I may [stand] befor his godlie face.
Vnto the devill I leif my synnis all,
Fra him thai come, to him agane thai sall.

Now fair weill Rannoch, with thy loch and ile,
To me thow wes richt traist baith evin and morne,
Thow wes the place that wald me nocht begyle
Quhen I haue bene oft at the kingis horne :
Yit may thou ban the houre I wes borne,
For vncourtuuslie I quite the thy hyre,
That left the birnand in ane felloun fyre.

Now, gude Glendoquhart, for euir mair adew,
That oft hes bene my bucklar and my beild,
Baith day and nycht to me thou wes richt trew,
And laitlie vnto quhen that I grew in eild
And durst na mair be sene vpon the feild
Nor dar the houlet quhen the day is licht,
Yit thow me kepit with thy mane and nicht.

Fair weill Glenloquhay, with thy forest fre ;
 Fair weill Fernay, that oft my freind hes bene ;
 Fair weill Morinche, alace, full wo is me !
 Thow wes the ground of all my wo and teyne ;
 Fair weill Braidalbane and Lochtay sa scheyne ;
 Fair weill Glenvrquhay and Glenlyoun baith,
 My daith to yow wil be bot litill skaith.

Fair weill Glenalmound, garding of plesance,
 For mony fair floure haue I fra ye tane ;
 Fair weill Strathbraan, and haue remembrance
 That thow sall neuir mair sie Duncane agane ;
 Atholl, Strathtay, of my death be fane,
 For oftymis I tuik youre reddiest geir,
 Thairfoir for me se ye greit not ane teir.

Fair weill Stratherne, maist cumlie for to knaw,
 Plenisit with plesand policie preclair
 Of touris and townis standand fair in raw ;
 I ruggit thy ribbis quhill oft I gart them rair :
 Gar thy wyffis, gif thow will do na mair,
 Sing my dirige eftir vsum Sarum,
 For oftymis I gart thame alarum.

Fair weill Menteith, quhair oft I did repair,
And come onsocht ay as dois the snaw,
To part fra the my hart is wonder sair,
Sumtyme of me I gart ye stand greit aw ;
Bot fortune now hes lend me sik ane blaw,
That thai quhilk dred me as the deith beforne,
Will mok me now with hethyn schame and scorne.

Adew all freindis, sen now I mon depart,
And end my lyfe with schame and miserie,
Quhilk sall not fail to yow all eftirwart,
Bot gif ye ceis and wickitnes lat be.
Bot of ane thing I warne yow all treulie,
Nowthir is, wes, or salbe you amang
To eschaip sa oft and do sa mekill wrang.

Behald heirof quhat is the finall end
Bot dulefull death, schamefullie to be schent ?
Quhairfoir now, or I ony forder wend,
My sinfull lyfe first heir I will repent,
Besikand the Lorde quhair I haue miswent,
Eftir the death that he will gif me syne,
The hevinlie place and heretage divyne.

*In manus tuas, Lorde that deit on rude,
Commendo spiritum meum with humilitie :
Redemisti me with thy pretious blude,
Fra endles pane of hell to mak me frie :
Sen for my saik thou damned wes to die,
Grant me thy grace eftir this warldlie stryf
For to obtene the euirlasting lyf.*

Amen.

The sworde and fir tree croceit beneath ane croun
 Ar fatall signes appropriat to this race,
 By sum foirseing fellow weill set down,
 Meit for suche lymmaris spoilzeing euerie place.
 The croun presentis the Kingis most royall grace,
 Ane rychteous judge with skill quha dois decre
 That thai and all such cutthroittis suld imbrace
 His seueir censure for thair villanie,
 To wit, gif ony fra his sworde gois frie
 On execute, continewing in thair wrang,
 He will erect ane gallous of that tric,
 And thairvpone thame in ane widdie hang.
 Sa faris my wittis can serve, I can nocht ken
 Ane better badge for suche a sort of men.

Signed at Finlarg, 22d July 1636.

JOHN CAMPBELL, fear of Glenurquhay, sets to Nicoll M'Lefeunrik V'Nicoll, for five years, the merkland of Arrivean in Glenloquhay; he paying yearly out of every couple of new calved kye he shall receive to grass thereupon as much as any former tenant did, with carriages, hosting, hunting, watching, and all other usual services, and relieving the said John Campbell of all taxations thereon. He shall receive to grass on the saids lands some yeild kye and pay the usual duty therefrom, keep the mares in Glenloquhay and their followers as stoddert thereof, for which he shall have the usual pay; he shall make his principal residence on the saids lands and preserve the woods, answer the hue and cry of the country against thieves, oppressors, and robbers, and stop them to the utmost of his power, under the penalty of the loss of his moveable goods; it being provided that if the said Nicoll be impeded in labouring the saids lands by any enemy's army, the tack shall become void, and he shall be bound to pay only such duty as four honest men, assessors in the country, shall appoint. Signed at Finlarg, 8 November 1651.

16.       JOHNE CAMPBELL of Glenurchay younger sets to Johne Dow Crerar in Garrous, for five years, the merkland of Pitmakie, and the sheilling of Corriegoir ; and the said Johne binds himself and his heirs to pay yearly therefor sixty pounds Scots, the usual presents, excepting the teinds payable to the minister, and his own good will of presents ; and also obliges himself to be fowler to the Laird, and to go to the hills with a sufficient lying dog and fowling nets, to seek for, take, and kill wild fowl and moorfowl of all kinds, as convenience and the season shall offer and as he shall be required, and on the Lairds desire to send to his house one of his sons skilled in fowling to serve in his office with dog and nets fit for the purpose, and to train up a sufficient fowling dog for the use of the Laird, for which the Laird will always furnish him with a young dog of a good fowling kind. Signed at Balloch, 25th April 1663.
17.       COMMISSION by John Earl of Breadalbane, to John M'Intyr in Glacsgour, to be forrester of the south side of the forest of Corichiba for keeping the marches thereof, he being bound not to have any sheillings nor to pasture any goods within the old limits thereof, and to stop all passengers travelling through it with guns ; to free himself, his family, and any who lodge with him of eating venison, except the umbles and entrails of such as shall be killed for the Earl's use ; to kill in seasonable time of year, that is, from Midsummer to Hallowmas, the number of sixteen deer to be sent to the officer of Finlarg, the chamberlain of Glenurchy detaining from him a boll of meal for every deer he is short of the number ; and he is to receive all the deer and roes in the forest at the sight of the chamberlain and honest men in the country, and the chamberlain is to write on the back of the tack the number so received that it may be known how the deer have increased under his care ; for which the Earl allows the said John the shealing of Blaraven, the said John being bound to sheal himself upon the borders and extremities of the forest, where his predecessors did, in order to keep off broken men and destroyers of deer ; and the said John is to have eight bolls meal out of Achnofavnich. Signed at Castle Kelchurne, 30 March 1687.

JOHN EARL OF BREADALBANE sets to John M'Nab for five years, the grazing hills of Bentechie and Elerig, with the other accustomed places where his Lordship and his predecessors' horses were wont to pasture in Glenloch, delivering to him thirty stud mares either with foal or having foals at their feet, the one half worth fifty merks a piece, as also one hundred merks Scots to buy a sufficient stallion, not exceeding five years of age, to be kept with the mares on the said grass ; and the said John is to keep the mares, foals, and stallion on his own peril, and to be answerable for them in all cases, excepting only the case of open daylight depredations and public harrings in a hostile manner, to keep the stallion from labour, to pay the Earl the sum of ten pounds Scots for each of the mares yearly in name of tack duty, and at the expiry of his tack to redeliver to the Earl the same number of mares and foals and a stallion all of equal value with those he received, or to pay the foresaid prices for the mares and the stallion if awanting, and in like manner ten pounds for every foal he shall be short of the number of thirty as is above mentioned, delivering also the Earl's burning iron which he received for marking the horses. Signed at Finlarg, 11 June 1702.

19.

JOHN EARL OF BREADALBANE sets to John Campbell M'Phadrich Vic Connochie Bane in Inuerchorachan in Glenfyne, for eight years, the three and a half merkland of Kylebryde and Culenacca, with the grazings, fishings, and pertinents thereof, lying within the parish of Glenarey, barony thereof, and sheriffdom of Argyle, and because the lands are waste, gives him eight bolls oat meal at his entry thereto; for which the said John Campbell binds himself to erect thereon sufficient houses, byres, and barns, with dykes, before Martinmas 1705, and to pay for the saids lands to the Earl's order at Inverarey or Glenfalloch, the number of five hundred sufficient herring in April 1703, five hundred sufficient salt herring in August or September following, three barrels at Martinmas 1703, six barrels in 1704, nine barrels at Martinmas 1705, or ten pounds Scots for each undelivered barrel, and at Martinmas 1706 and yearly thereafter during the said tack the half of the highest rent that was paid to Charles Campbell of Ballochyle or his predecessors over and above the nine barrels of herring, the other half of the rent being remitted in consideration of the said John's services, and the ruinous condition of the land; he also binds himself to preserve the woods, to suffer no goats to pasture thereon, to entertain the Earl, his horses, and necessary servants attending them, when he happens to be at Inverarey, and to furnish white fish and shell fish to the Earl's family during his Lordship's residence at Castle Kelchurne. Signed at Taymouth and Finlarg, 20 and 22 February 1703.

the best officeis that lyes in my power to his Maiestie, bothe in this and in all wther things that schall ather tuiche or concerne you, as I am bound in dewtie of bloud to do. Thus, with the rememberence of my trewe loue to yourself and all yours, I rest

Your werie assured freind and kinsman to serue you,

P. MURRAY.

THEABOLLS PARK, the 9 of Marche 1622.

His Maiestie dothe not a lytill wounder that he that hes liued chast from wemen except his owin quein all his dayis, schuld be trubled with the gutt, and you, that hes so largely bestowed your talentt amongst them schuld skaipe bothe gutt and wther diseissis, bot his Maiestie is werie glaide that you have your helthe so weill. WALE.

To our trustie and welbeloued Sir DUNCAN CAMPBELL of Glenurquhay, knighte.

JAMES R.—Trustie and welbeloued, wee greete yow well. Wee have understood as well by your letter to our seruant Sir Patrik Murray as by the reporte of our seruant Scandoner, your carefull and earnest endeououris for the performance of whatsoeuer yee can imagine to tende to our seruice, and likewise your speciall care and good enterteinment of Scandoner himselfe, which, as it hath giuen him occasioun to speake of that our kingdome in generall and of yow in particulare as of people deutifullie deuoted to their prince and well affected to strangers, so wee giue yow moste heartie thankes for the same. Wee haue also, by your letter to Sir Patrik Murray, understood your honest offer for bringing of deere into Glen Aumonde, which, as it hath proceeded of your speciall desire to procure our contentment, so wee verie well esteeme thereof, and therefore desire you to go on, assuring you that thereby yee shall do us verie acceptable seruice, whereof, when occasion shalbe offered, we will not be unmindefull. Farewell. Giuen at our Mannour of Theobaldes, the 24th day of Julie 1622.

To our trustie and welbeloued the LAIRD of GLEANWRQUHYE.

CHARLES R.—Trustie and welbeloued, wee greet yow well. Whereas wee haue giuen warrant unto Alexander M'Naughtan gentleman of our priiue chamber in ordinarie for levyng two hundreth bow-men in that our kingdome, for our seruice in the war wherein we are engaged with France; and being informed that the persones in those high countries are ordinarlie good bow-men, wee are hereby well pleased to desire yow to use your best meanes to cause levy such a number of them for our said seruant as possiblie yow can, he performing such conditiones with them as are usuall in the like cases, which wee will tak as a speciall pleasure unto us, whereof wee will not be unmindefull when any occasion shall offer whereby we may expresse our respect unto yow. So wee bid yow farewell. From our court at Windsore, the 12 of August 1627.

[From the MARCHIONESS of HAMILTON.]

HONOURED COUSING,—I resauid your lettir and your feir seid, and geiuis you harttily thankis for your cair in sending them to me. Be-liue me, I think moir of them nor ye can imagin, for I loue them moir nor I dou al the frount tris in the wordil. I haue alrady ane four or fayf houndir of my auin planting, that is pratti treis, and deid dereckly weith them as ye set doune in your lettir ; bot my soune louis them no les nor I dou, and hes wilit me to plant a greit manay meie, quich meid me trobbil you for this yeir ; and as ye haue takin painis for me,
I must requist you to gar prouayd soum of the seid for me.

Lord Linsay, my good sonne, he is ane warie grit plantter of his eig as euir I kneue anay, and I am glaid to cherich him to it ; He will send ane hors and man for ane leid of them within ten or tual dayis,

and I must requist you to gar haue them rady. He hes takin in ane greit baunis for them. He can win the seid himselue, as he hes sein me dou, so ye wil only neid to send him the noutis. In quhat he can, I sal be bond to you ye sall find him caynd. So, wicking you al happines, I rest, compt of thingis furnest to Jhone since this tyme twelfmonth, and Duncanis since his cuming, bot my wyffe quho knew sundry particularis therof wes in Edinburgh ; bot it salbe sent with the nixt berar, God willing. The bairnis, blissed be God, ar weill. The freiss that wes sent to be thame clothes, thair wes maid ane cott and brekis to Duncan thairof, and ane cott to Jhone. Ye wald send alsmeke cloth as wald be ane gown to Jhone, and his old gown wald serue for ane gown to Duncane. The berar spak sumthing to me of freiss to be Jhone ane garment of clothes, bot I will luke for your lettir mair particularlie. Jhone wilbe ane schollar, God willing, if he be nocht interrupted. Duncane beginnis weill, God saiff him. So nocht having forder for the present bot remembering my commendationis of service to the lady your bedfallow, committis yow both with the rest of your children to God his eternall protectioun. I pray yow haiff ane speciall cair of your dochteris, for I trust in the mercy of God that your ladis salbe gude men. Assure the lady your wyffe, that I sall haiff ane speciall cair, vnder God, of hir sonnes that ar heir, and requeist hir nocht to think long eftir thame. The dowblet ye caust mak to Duncane is now vp at the slot of his breist. Ye wald say that he wearis his belt as men sayis Mr. George Buchanan did weare his, the dowblet is growen so schort. I wott nocht how your ministeris of Ergyle and Bredalban wilbe handit with your Bischopis, bot all the honest men of the ministrie heir luikis for nothing bot the werst, for the Bischopis and they will nocht agree with ws heir ; for everie honest minister in all our eist partis will rather leave thair ministrie or they yield in one jot to the Bischopis. God mak your ministeris thair honest and constant men, for we heir thair is mony slim amongis thame, that or thay quyte the bannok thay will quyte a gude conscience. God of his mercy be with yow, and restis

Your awin, efter the old maner,

Mr. WILLIAM BOWIE.

Duncan mon haiff ane vther dowblet.

HADINGTOUN, the 16 of November 1619.

Thair wes tuo of the xx mark peceis rounged and far les then the thrid wes. If they will pass, I sall put thame soone from me.
